

Clive Lee's family were bombed out of Walthamstow in London during the war so his mother travelled to be with friends in Scotland in the summer of 1944, where she gave birth to Clive. Despite being born north of the border Clive was brought up in London and now lives in Bromsgrove.

Art is one of several hobbies that Clive has taken up late in life, not really starting until he was 69, although he then took up the saxophone one year later!

He has also been keen on Judo, piano, organ and music theory as well as gardening over the years.

He says, "Like music art is fantastic medium for self expression and virtuosity and the sky's the limit. I only hope that my paintings give lots of pleasure to people that acquire them."

